How to Become a Christian

NOT RELIGION · A RELATIONSHIP

A short, honest guide to what the Bible actually says about becoming a Christian — written to go with the video, so you can read it at your own pace.

ABOUT THIS CHANNEL

What PreachersRealm actually is, and why it exists.

A lot of Christian content online assumes you already speak the language — that you grew up in Sunday school, that you know what "being saved" means, that the names and the verses are already familiar. PreachersRealm doesn't assume that. It's built for people standing exactly where you might be standing right now: curious, maybe skeptical, maybe hurting, not sure if any of this is even for you.

> ”Walk the Path · Know the Word” isn’t about having arrived. It’s about moving — one honest step at a time, with the Bible actually open in front of you instead of taken on someone else’s word.

Why the diagrams

The line-animation style exists for a reason: the Bible's core message gets buried under centuries of religious language and denominational baggage. Strip it back to the simplest possible shape — a picture, not a sermon — and the actual message gets clearer, not smaller.

Why the verse references

Every claim in this guide and in the videos comes with a reference you can look up yourself. Not because you have to trust me — because you shouldn't have to. Open a Bible, check it, see if it holds up.

What to expect

New videos on a regular rhythm, each one explaining a single idea clearly rather than trying to cover everything at once. Short on the main feed, longer explanations on YouTube for anyone who wants to go deeper.

What this isn’t

Not a denomination, not a church, not a substitute for one. Think of it as a clear on-ramp — the first honest conversation before the bigger one with a real community near you.

A PERSONAL NOTE

I started exactly where you're standing right now.

If part of you is reading this wondering whether it's actually for you — whether you need to clean your life up first, read the whole Bible cover to cover, find the right church, or say the right words in the right order before any of this counts — I understand that hesitation first-hand, because I asked every one of those questions myself. I'm not a pastor, I don't have a seminary degree, and I didn't grow up in a home where this was already figured out. I came to it the same way you might be coming to it now: curious, a little guarded, not totally sure if I was wasting my time.

What actually moved me wasn't a dramatic moment or a perfect argument. It was reading the Bible plainly, for myself, without a denomination's filter on top of it, and finding that it held up to honest questions instead of needing me to switch my brain off to believe it. I asked about suffering, about other religions, about whether any of it could really be true in a way that mattered for an ordinary life. I didn't get every answer immediately. I got enough to take the next honest step, and then the one after that — which, it turns out, is really all this ever asks of anyone.

That's the real reason PreachersRealm exists. Not to build an audience, and not because I have it all figured out now either — I don't. It's because once I'd walked this path myself, I wanted to hand the plainest, clearest version of it to anyone else standing at the start of it, the way I wish someone had handed it to me: no jargon, no assumption that you already know the vocabulary, no pressure to perform a feeling you don't have yet. Just the actual claim, laid out clearly, with the references so you can check it yourself.

IF YOU ONLY TAKE ONE THING FROM THIS PAGE

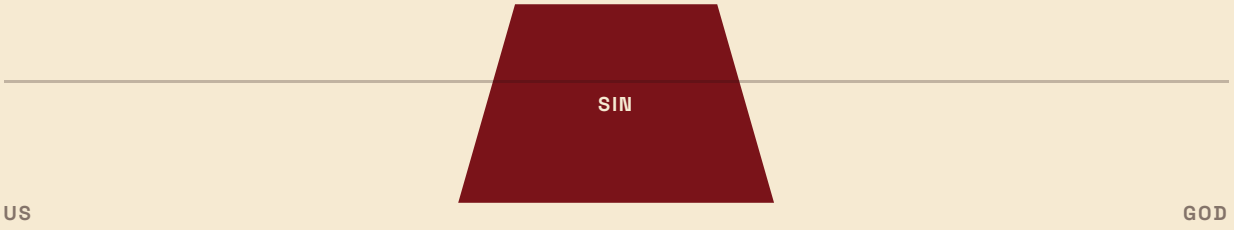

You don't have to arrive with your doubts resolved or your life in order. I didn't, and I still don't claim to have it all figured out. What you need is willingness to look honestly — the same willingness that got you this far into a guide with a title like this one. That's already more than enough to start with.

WHERE WE START

God is holy, perfect, and full of light — and He made us to know Him.

Before anything else, it helps to know this: God isn't distant, and He isn't disinterested. The Bible opens with a God who makes people on purpose, specifically so they could know Him (GENESIS 1:27). Not as servants kept at arm's length. As people He actually wanted to be close to. And the clearest statement of that whole relationship is one line: He loves you (JOHN 3:16). That's the starting point for everything else in this guide — not fear, not obligation. Love, offered first.

But something stands in the way of that closeness, and the Bible has a specific word for it: sin. It's not a word reserved for obviously terrible things. At its core it just means choosing our own way instead of God's — the small decisions as much as the big ones, pride as much as cruelty, self-interest as much as outright wrongdoing (ROMANS 3:23). Everyone does this, in ways large and small, every single day. It sounds like a minor technicality. It isn't. Left unaddressed, it creates a real and measurable gap between us and a holy God (ISAIAH 59:2), and the Bible describes the end result of that gap in blunt terms: it leads to death — not just physically, but a deeper separation from the source of life itself (ROMANS 6:23).

Most people try to close that gap on their own — being a good person, practicing a religion, doing enough good deeds to outweigh the bad. It's a completely natural instinct; almost every belief system in human history has some version of it. But think it through honestly: if the standard is a perfect, holy God, how much good behavior would actually be enough? There's no finish line to reach by trying harder. Every honest attempt falls short of that bar, because the bar was never ours to meet in the first place. Which is exactly why the Bible is so direct about this: we're saved by grace, through faith — not by works (EPHESIANS 2:8–9). Not because we earned it through effort. Because it was given, freely, to people who couldn't earn it.

THE BRIDGE

God didn’t wait for us to fix it. He came to us.

This is the heart of the whole story. If the gap exists because no one can live a perfect life, then the only way across it is if someone actually did — and that's exactly the claim Christianity makes about Jesus. Not a good teacher who showed us the way, but someone who lived the perfect, sinless life none of us could manage, on our behalf.

And here's the detail that changes everything: it didn't happen after we cleaned ourselves up, or once we'd proven we deserved it. While we were still sinners — in the middle of choosing our own way, not after fixing it — Christ died for us (ROMANS 5:8). That timing is the whole point. It wasn't a reward for good behavior. It was offered to people who hadn't earned it and couldn't, which is the only kind of gift that actually makes sense given everything in Part One.

Then He rose again — not as a metaphor, but as a historical claim the earliest Christians staked everything on (1 CORINTHIANS 15:3–4). The resurrection matters because it's the proof that the payment actually worked: death didn't hold, which means the debt sin created was genuinely settled. That's what turns the cross from a tragedy into a bridge — the one thing that actually closes the gap sin created, built by God, not assembled by us.

US GOD

Here's the part that matters most, and the part people skip past too quickly: a bridge only helps if you actually cross it. You can admire a bridge from a distance, study its engineering, even believe sincerely that it would hold your weight — and still never cross to the other side. Knowing this story isn't the same as receiving it. God has done His part. The invitation is fully open. What's left is a response, and that's exactly what the next page walks through.

CROSSING IT

Three simple steps — no magic words, just your heart.

1

Admit you need Him.

This is just honesty before God — not shame, not self-punishment, just truth. It means dropping the pretense that you can close the gap yourself and admitting you actually need rescuing. You don't have to clean yourself up first, and you don't have to fully understand everything in this guide before you can be honest about where you stand.

1 JOHN 1:9

2

Believe Jesus died and rose for you.

Not just as a historical fact you'd nod along to, but as something true for you personally — that His death and resurrection actually cover your specific gap, not just humanity's in the abstract. This is the step that moves the story from something you know about to something you're trusting your life to.

ROMANS 10:9

3

Follow Him as your Lord.

This is the beginning of an ongoing relationship, not a one-time transaction you complete and move on from. It means choosing, day by day and often imperfectly, to follow where He leads instead of defaulting back to your own way. Nobody does this perfectly from day one — it's a direction, not a finish line.

LUKE 9:23

A NOTE

There's no perfect formula of words that unlocks this, and no feeling you're required to have before it counts. It's about your heart genuinely turning toward God, not reciting a script correctly. If you don't feel dramatically different right away, that's normal — faith is a decision you keep making, not a one-time emotional high. The prayer on the next page is just one honest way to put that decision into words.

A SIMPLE PRAYER

If this is where you are right now, you can say this — in your own words, to God, right where you're sitting.

PRAY THIS, OR SOMETHING LIKE IT

"Jesus, I know I've sinned and I need you.
I believe you died for me and rose again.
I turn from my old way and trust you as my Lord.
Thank you for forgiving me. Amen."

You don't need the exact words above — what matters is the honesty behind them. If you're not quite ready to pray this and mean it, that's alright too. Sit with Part Two and Part Three again. This isn't a countdown, and nobody's keeping score on how long it takes you to get here.

And if you've prayed something like this before, a long time ago, and drifted since — you can pray it again. Recommitting isn't starting over from zero. It's just turning back around.

WELCOME

If you meant that — even nervously, even unsure — welcome to God's family. This isn't the finish line. It's the start of a relationship that's meant to grow, one honest day at a time, built the same way any relationship is: by showing up to it.

YOUR NEXT STEPS

Four simple habits to actually grow from here.

1

Read the Bible

Start with the Gospel of John — it was written specifically so people would come to believe. Try a chapter a day; it's short enough to finish in about three weeks, and every chapter points back to what you just read in this guide.

2

Pray Daily

Talk to God like you would anyone else — what's actually on your mind, not a formal script. A simple rhythm: say thank you for one thing, be honest about one struggle, ask for one thing. That's a real prayer.

3

Find a Church

Faith grows best alongside other people, not alone in private. Look for a church that takes the Bible seriously and treats people warmly — visit a few before settling, and go back more than once before deciding.

4

Tell Someone

Share your story with someone you trust — a friend, family member, or in the comments on the video. Saying it out loud makes it real, and it's often the first step toward finding others on the same path.

Y

I started exactly the same way — unsure, a little hesitant, not knowing all the right words, and honestly not sure if any of it would actually hold up once I looked closer. It did. I didn't have it figured out then, and I still don't claim to have it all figured out now. But this is the same path I'm still walking, a few steps further along, and I'd genuinely love to hear where you're at. Let me know in the comments on the video, or reach out directly — I'd love to pray for you.
